CURRENTLY

UI & Graphic Designer, Front-End Web Developer S. Quinton Green

As a freelancer, I've focused mainly on building my skill set as a user interface designer and front-end web developer. In addition to being fluent in HTML and CSS - especially HTML5 and CSS3 - I've gained a working knowledge of JavaScript and jQuery.

Through a number of various projects, I've gained valuable experience working with rapid web prototyping frameworks such as Bootstrap and Foundation, and technologies such as AJAX, couchdb, Backbone.js, and jQuery Mobile.

I continue building upon these new skills through a combination of structured university-level courses, as well as self-directed research and experimentation.

SEPTEMBER 2009

During my tenure with Georgia State University, I took on a variety of roles and responsibilities. Primarily falling under the role of visual designer, I designed and published a variety of brochures, booklets, and other print material for the promotion of the center and their various training courses. In addition print design, I also maintained the center's website, which averaged more than 5,000 unique page-views monthly. My day-to-day work included, but was not limited to:

- Solely responsible for both print and screen assets.
- Produced graphics for the web, images for the various LCD monitors placed throughout the Andrew Young School.
- Development of custom template types for the Reddot CMS.
- Development and theming of custom-built multimedia module utilizing Drupal CMS.
- Day to day roles also included the photographing of visiting scholars, visiting speakers, and seminars, as well as photo and video editing.

JANUARY 2008

When I began work as a freelance designer, illustrator, and photographer, I needed an umbrella that could serve as a creative identity. S. Quinton Green evolved as a direct result of that need, and currently serves as a vehicle with which I deliver my perspectives on design and technology.
